To my husband, Bret Hirsch – my biggest champion for the last 17 years. No matter what crazy idea I get in my brain, you’re 100% behind it. Thank you for tolerating the nights when I had to work on this and left you on the couch to watch Marvel movies on your own (although you probably didn’t mind that at all, huh?) And thank you for grabbing our crying son from his bed in the middle of the night to bring him into ours when I was locked in the guestroom working on this. I love you.

To my son Elliott Hirsch, my one and only, who tolerated my typing on my laptop in the middle of countless Houston Astros baseball games and Texas A&M football games. You certainly already have a way with words at just four years old, and I hope you grow up to love writing and reading as much as your parents.

To Katherine Jankovic. I so appreciate your enthusiasm, collaboration and “designer” eyes on this book. You made the process of brainstorming, collaborating and designing a modern and fresh book cover effortless and fun. I can’t wait for our next project together.

To Chad White, for your guidance and encouragement when I first pitched this book idea to you back in December 2018. I could not have done this without the insights you gathered and shared from publishing your own book, Email Marketing Rules . Your advice made the process so much easier. Good luck on your next one!

And to Sarah Ostiz. I’m so glad I stumbled across your profile on my frantic search for a Microsoft Word formatting expert. I could not have taken these pages to the finish line without your mad formatting skills, and I’m so grateful to you.

INTRODUCTION

True story: I didn't know what a copywriter was when I applied for my first copywriting job at Williams-Sonoma in 2005. That is, until someone reminded me that the Seinfeld character, Elaine Benes, was a copywriter for the J. Peterman catalog. All I knew, thanks to the job posting, was that the job required lots of writing. And being a recent graduate with a journalism degree and internships at magazines and newspapers under my belt, I knew I could write. So I went to the interview, smiled a lot, pretended I knew exactly what a copywriter did, shared some work samples, passed the copywriting test, and what do you know, I got the job!

My new job would entail writing both descriptive and marketing copy for Pottery Barn Kids and Teen furniture, bedding and accessories across their monthly catalogs, websites and email campaigns.

It was so much fun (and just cool) until I realized after a few weeks that I had to write about the same things over and over and over again. Striped bedding, floral bedding, checkered bedding, Bunk beds, queen beds, trundle beds, floral curtains, floral rugs, floral backpacks, summertime shindigs, back to school study spaces, and holiday gatherings.

There was so much to write, and so little time to come up with something fresh for every asset I was writing for. I was writing and editing copy across catalogs, web, email marketing campaigns, social media and in-store signage. I needed a way to keep track of every idea I had – good and bad – for every item I'd had to write for, so that if I needed those good or bad ideas in the future, I'd have a nice little repository ready to pull from.

Need a headline about the new floral bedding for page 2 of the summer catalog? You got it.

Need a “punny” subject line for that email marketing campaign that goes out tomorrow morning promoting our holiday collections? Done!

No time? No coffee? No problem!

So how was I doing it all?

Well, I had been keeping a stack of at least 15 5x7” lined pages from a spiral notebook at my desk at all times with all of my brainstorm words, phrases and ideas for every topic I'd ever had to write about. It was the only way to keep track of those good (and yes, many bad) ideas so that I could pull from them in a pinch.

And pull from them, I did.

Before I knew it, those lined pieces of paper, which I'd had to re-staple every few months when the corners of the pages became so worn that the staple simply fell out, were becoming so soft, almost see-through, that they were starting to fall apart. And I'd only been at the company for a little over a year!

Worried that the janitor might see this sad, faded stack of hastily stapled papers and think it was trash (I'm telling you, the papers were looking rough ), I decided it was time to transfer those ideas to the 21st century and into my computer.

So I opened a fresh Microsoft Word document on my computer and started transferring my ideas. I created one Word document per topic. Before I knew it, I had at least 30 different files covering topics like holidays, sports, prints and colors.

And while I left my job at Williams-Sonoma in 2011, I took all of those Word docs I'd built to every job after and kept on adding to them as I moved from one company, industry and product to another.

My copywriting skills have since taken me from San Francisco to New York and back home to Texas. I've written for just about every medium available: newspapers, magazines, websites, email marketing campaigns, catalogs, social media, in-store signage, RFPs, pitch decks and more. And like any seasoned copywriter, I've had to learn and write about a variety of topics and industries, including fashion, software, travel, toys, financial services, automotive, insurance and even cloud technology.

Those Microsoft Word docs have swelled to over 130 topics and subcategories. (I wish I could say I still have that original stack of 5x7" pages, but they were just not tough enough to survive my Marie Kondo-inspired purge of 2016.)

Now, 15 years after that first copywriting job at Williams-Sonoma, I figured it was time to make it official and transfer these ideas and Microsoft Word docs to another format – an actual book.

I hope this book will help those fellow and future copywriters during their writer's block moments when they just don't know what else to say about that darn polka dot rug they've had to write about for three seasons in a row. Or that new small business owner come up with fun copy for their own website or promotions. Or that blogger who thinks the headline for his or her next blog post could and should be a little punchier.

My hope is that this book becomes as well worn, dog-eared and soft as that stack of 5x7" lined pages I had at my desk as a 20-something copywriter who was just learning what it was that a copywriter actually does. Enjoy!

HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

This is not the type of book I ever thought I'd write. You know, the next Great American Novel. A book where you start at the beginning and end at the end – although you can totally do that with this one if you feel so inclined. With this book, you can just flip through to see if anything inspires you, or check out the table of contents to get an idea of the types of topics I've included here.

Need to write something right now? See if the topic or category you're writing about is in here and flip to that page. Scroll through some of the words and phrases I have for that topic or category and see if any of them fits or gets your wheels turning.

Some lists are definitely longer than others simply because I wrote about some topics more frequently. And if you need additional inspiration, check out a few quick copywriting tips I've gathered on the next page or some of my favorite resources at the back of this book.

A FEW QUICK COPYWRITING TIPS

Books upon books have been written about how to be a great copywriter. So I won't waste your time diving too deep into the process. But I would like to share a few tips I've picked up along the way that can help make writing copy and headlines a little easier and more impactful.

Ask Questions

Of course, you should always start with the who, what, where, when, why, and how, but you should also always ask, "So what?" That's probably the most important question. Your copy should answer that to ultimately help readers decide why your business or product or service is exactly what they need.

"So, before you begin the writing, be sure you know the purpose or mission or objective of every piece of content that you write. What are you trying to achieve? What information, exactly, are you trying to communicate? And why should your audience care?"

– Ann Handley, author of Everybody Writes

Know Your Audience

I'll never forget the time I had to write about nightstands for children's bedrooms during my first job as a copywriter for Pottery Barn Kids. As a 23-year old, I had absolutely no idea why children would need nightstands by their bed. Seeing my struggle, my manager and editor at the time, Darrah MacLean, told me something to the effect of, "This is not for kids. This is for moms. Moms need somewhere to place all those bedtime books before they turn off the lights." I immediately felt my heart flutter as I imagined my own parents telling me goodnight as a child, and I realized that I wasn't really thinking about my real audience – the parents (duh!).

Think about not only what your audience needs to know, but also what they want to know. What are their struggles? Their concerns? Their fears? Their desires?

What do you want them to think, feel and do once they read your copy? Outlining that will help you write copy that really speaks to them.

Know Your Medium

Direct marketing copy is different from editorial copy. For instance, longer copy is fine in a magazine editorial piece or a blog post, but in an email marketing campaign, where you have less than a second to get a subscriber's attention, your headline and copy need to work a lot harder and faster. Your copy should fit the purpose of the medium you're writing for.

*“Get rid of half the words on each page,
then get rid of half of what's left.”*

– Steve Krug, author of Don't Make Me Think

Have Fun with Your Words (and Online Resources)

Depending on the brand and audience you're writing for, you can really have some fun with words, phrases and headlines. But it definitely takes a little more creativity. If you're not as creative or “punny” as you'd like to be, here's what a typical process might look like when I'm trying to come up with something clever.

So, let's say you're writing about stripes.

1. If you don't want to actually use the word “stripes”, then just go somewhere like <http://www.thesaurus.com/> to find an alternate. There you'll find words like ribbon, streak, band, etc. Pick the one that works best for your brand and product.

2. Now maybe you work for a very playful brand, like J.Crew or Poketo, that's more open to fun puns and wordplay in their headlines and copy. Try searching for idioms and similar phrases online at sites like <http://www.idioms.thefreedictionary.com/> . In the search box, type “stripe” and see what you get.

3. You might get something like “Change one's stripes” or “Show your stripes”, both of which could be perfect for a fashion magazine spread.

4. However, maybe you don't want to use the word “stripes” because, oh I don't know, the VP at the company hates that word. So try to search for idioms with the word “band” or “streak” and you might get something like “Winning streak” or “Strike up the band.”

5. If you still haven't found just the right phrase, you can go to <http://www.rhymezone.com/> and see what other words rhyme with “stripes” that might open the door to additional headline ideas. Words that rhyme with stripes could include pipe, ripe or swipe.

So how about changing “Swipe right”, which is slang for really liking something, to “Stripe right”? Can you see how a fun headline like that could also influence the design of a layout?

6. Now search for idioms using those rhymed words to see if you can produce any other fun options by just replacing the rhymed word with “stripe”. For instance, the idiom “pipe dream” can become “stripe dream”. And “ripe for the picking” could turn into “stripes for the picking”. Cute, right?

7. Still drawing a blank? Try doing a topic search on scrapbooking sites, for instance www.scrapbook.com , for more inspiration.

8. Now, all those semi-good ideas you gathered during your online search? Add them to your own brainstorming documents (or pencil them into this book!) in case you think you can use them in the future.

9. Share your clever new headline ideas with the designer or marketing team and bask in all the glory and praise.

*“Make it simple. Make it memorable.
Make it inviting to look at. Make it fun to read.”*

– Leo Burnett

For more inspiration, check out Additional Resources at the end of this book. Now let’s dig into some fun words and phrases I’ve gathered along the way. I hope they inspire you and help you write copy that’s all your own.
